

Mylan Wins Summary Judgment in EpiPen® Litigation Brought by Sanofi

December 18, 2020

PITTSBURGH, Dec. 18, 2020 /PRNewswire/ -- Viatris Inc. (NASDAQ: VTRS) today announced that the U.S. District Court for the District of Kansas entered summary judgment in Mylan's favor in the lawsuit brought against it by Sanofi related to its EpiPen® products.

Viatris is extremely pleased with this significant action by the Court as it rejects Sanofi's baseless attempts to argue that Mylan used anticompetitive practices to market EpiPen and goes a long way in supporting the Company's commitment to vigorously defend itself against unfounded claims.

For the past three years, Sanofi, one of the world's largest pharmaceutical companies, has unjustly pursued money damages and attempted to blame Mylan for Sanofi's own failures in marketing Auvi-Q. The Court's favorable judgment should put an end to this attempt by Sanofi to advance a false narrative against Mylan and to use the antitrust laws to punish, rather than promote, competition. More than five years ago, Sanofi completely recalled Auvi-Q from the market and decided to return the product to the inventor after the product was found to potentially have inaccurate dosage delivery.

About EpiPen

EpiPen is used to treat life-threatening allergic reactions. Mylan has worked to allow access to Epinephrine in schools and public entities, so it can be readily available for any child who needs it. Mylan has given away more than 1 million EpiPen products to schools across America. These free pens have been used thousands of times, potentially saving lives.
